

Student's Name

Professor's Name

Course

Date

Tribute to My Grandparents

Outline:

A. Introduction.

I. Opening With Impact.

II. Connecting with the audience.

III. Preview of Main Points

B. Body

I. Happiness and Love.

II. Love in different aspects; transition statement.

III. Impact of love.

C. Conclusion

I. Summary of main points.

II. Impact

Tribute to my Grandparents

My grandparents educated me on marriage being an institution that gives one a privilege to be together with someone all their lives. Marriage allows us to have our best friend by our side, and know that they are always there for us. It allows one to be sure they have someone to help them through life.

Happiness and love are aspects of life that make individuals stay true to themselves and enjoy their lives to their fullest. They are justified emotions and are mind reinforced by other people in our lives. Love and happiness are the center of life for most of us. Globally, people seek happiness through love. Religion highlights that love is an essential commandment declared by God. Therefore, without love, there will be no harmony, peace, and happiness. My grandparents understood it clearly, and loved each other all their lives unconditionally, and were the happiest people I knew.

All of us experience love and happiness since our birth. It is in very rare circumstances that a child is born and abandoned by their parents. However, even such children are still able to experience love at one point or happiness at another. And as children grow into adulthood, they get into relationships and begin to experience love to their significant others. This love can be everlasting if both spouses maintain resilience and stay in love.

It is not difficult to understand the secret of ultimate happiness, because love is the key to it. The love between brother and sister, husband and wife, parents and children. Love is the place of happiness, even though it requires individuals to be unselfish.

Progressively, my grandparents experienced this unconditional love that made them extremely happy. Unfortunately, my grandfather passed away 5 months after the death of my grandmother. They left behind a family that loved them devotedly and enjoyed their company at all times. My grandparents taught me that marriage is not only about love, but also about maximum devotion of both parties to each other. I was lucky enough to witness their eternal love for each other, and I think they were the ones who taught me that love is the most magical thing that could happen to us. The marriage displayed by my grandparents was full of happiness and love. They could not be separated, and the way they understood each other was astonishing. I know this for sure as I was very close to them since they brought me up in my early childhood.

A few days after the demise of my grandmother, my grandfather elaborated that she was the best gift God had given to him. He told me that he wished me well, and gave me all his blessings. The kind of love my grandparents had is something I still look up to. It was pure and unattached to the current generation's involvement in social media and technology, as I believe that true marriage is a hard and complicated institution that requires more than just simple likes on Facebook.

I believe that love and affection towards your significant other will ultimately lead one to happiness. It is the friends and family around you that will always love you just for who you are. Happiness is an emotion that lets us enjoy our lives, and gives us a sense of confidence. And the only thing that can make us happy is love, and thanks to my grandparents I know that for sure.